INCIDENT OF THE MONTH

Cortland Police received a complaint of internet fraud and threats using social media. A Cortland resident reported he agreed to purchase a cell phone from a person using the Facebook marketplace. After some price haggling, the complainant felt the seller may just take the money and not send him the phone so he canceled the deal. The seller got angry and became abusive; ultimately threatening the complainant by telling him a bomb would be sent to his house. The complainant told the reporting officer he took this as a terrorist threat. The reporting officer called the number as provided by the seller. After identifying himself as law enforcement, the person became angry and verbally abusive and further denied that he was selling a phone. After disconnecting, several more attempts were made to call the number but were met with hang ups. A search of Facebook the phone was no longer listed for sale. Phone records for the number was requested via the service provider.
